Dear Colonel Endicott:

Enclosed are the suggested research themes that you requested in a letter to me on 7 May. They represent new ideas, topics taken off our exploratory lists and areas we would like to explore more fully, but for which we do not have an available resource. Our analysts would be pleased to talk to NDU students should they choose to work on any of these topics.

25X1

[ ] will be in touch with you by phone to arrange a meeting in late June to explain more fully the focus of our 1986 Research Program. Hopefully, this will help you in advising your students on topics. He will, at that time, also pass to you any late topic submissions from our offices.

We at CIA appreciate this opportunity to contribute and look forward to sharing in the product of NDU research where appropriate.

Sincerely,

/s/ William J. Casey

Topic: Spain and NATO

Brief Elaboration: This study would focus on the potential Spanish role in the integrated NATO military structure, should Madrid decide--based on the promised national referendum--to remain in the Alliance. Will Spanish forces be fully integrated into NATO, what potential roles could Spanish forces play in the defense of Central and Southern Europe, what are the trends in Spanish force capabilities and modernization, what issues will the Alliance face over the near and long term (e.g. location and command of an Iberian Command, the question of Gibraltar, etc.)

Topic: China's Navy: Prospects for Force Projection

Brief Elaboration: Some of China's neighbors have voiced concerns that, with military modernization, the PRC navy will gain a formidable force projection capability over the next decade. This study would assess the Chinese navy today and examine its potential of becoming a regional naval power. Particular emphasis would be given to the impact of Western military acquisitions on China's naval warfighting options.

Topic: Gorbachev's Generation: Eastern Europe's Emerging Leaders

Brief Elaboration: Several Warsaw Pact leaders are already well into their seventies and likely to depart the political scene. The purpose of this inquiry is to examine possible successors--people of Gorbachev's generation probably--whose perspectives have been shaped primarily by the post-World War II experience. The researcher must first identify principal candidates for leadership, then examine their backgrounds and writings and attempt to project their views of the relationship with the Soviet Union and the West.

Topic: Role of Chinese Academy of Sciences in Response to Chinese
S&T Reforms

Brief Elaboration: The following questions should be addressed: In actuality, how has the role and scope of the Chinese Academy of Sciences changed in response to the call for S&T reform? Are the Chinese following through on cutting down the size of the Academy? Are Government officials serious about changing the terms of funding, about going from government grants to earning one's way by contracting to production needs, and about allocation of personnel from Academy institutes to Ministry research units? Are Academy researchers moving rapidly from basic to applied research? Is there any significant resistance on the part of the researchers to the sweeping changes imposed by the S&T reforms?

Any other details: In March 1985 the Chinese Communist Party officially called for new reforms in Science & Technology. The reforms call for the size and advisory role of the Chinese Academy of Sciences to be changed; its focus will be on applied research rather than basic research. There are other aspects of the reform regarding the funding and allocation of scientific personnel that will lead to closer links between research and production units. The contract system and entities, such as technology markets, will come into play.

Topic: Soviet Methodology for Unified ASW Detection Techniques

Brief Elaboration: ASW detection techniques are often evaluated in isolation - acoustic, as opposed to non-acoustic; active, as opposed to passive, acoustic systems; magnetic, radioactive, wake, temperature, and bioluminescence signatures within the non-acoustic mode. However, the effectiveness of a number of interacting systems may be much greater than the utility of any one of them. Soviet interest along these lines is indicated by the fact that oceanographic research aircraft have been observed to carry a suite of sensor types. A study of the potential interaction of these devices is, therefore, likely to be more realistic than single evaluations of Soviet sensor effectiveness. Also, such a study may suggest advantageous combinations of US detection systems.

Topic: Instability in Somalia: Role of Military Sector Commanders

Brief Elaboration: Somalia's ongoing internal and external conflicts give the country's regional commanders a key role in the military-dominated Siad regime, and thus they directly influence its stability or instability. Regional insurgency and refugee problems are intensified by intertribal rivalries. The research should focus on the tribal backgrounds of these officers and on their handling of the military and political problems in their areas of responsibility, particularly with regard to tribal relations.

Time frame during which research on this topic may be useful to policy makers: Ongoing--regional problems are unlikely to resolve themselves in the foreseeable future.

Topic: The Role of the Church in Philippine Politics

Brief Elaboration: The Catholic Church is the most influential social institution in the Philippines. Some proponents of "liberation theology" have become more and more involved in politics and political movements--even joining insurgent groups. We are interested in the mainstream church. What are its views on the succession issue? On the insurgency? On economics? How does it make its views known and, most importantly, who listens to them? In short, how much clout does the church have? Examples of policies that the church has advocated and that have been adopted would be worthwhile.

The Philippine Business Community: A Continuing Source of Political Activism?

Brief Elaboration:

Since the assassination of Benigno Aquino in August 1983, the business community--a traditional supporter of President Marcos--has become involved in the opposition to the Marcos regime. Looking ahead to the 1986 local elections and the 1987 presidential elections, what role is the business community likely to play in Philippine politics? Is business community involvement likely to grow or wane over the next few years and what direction will it take? What role does the state of the economy play in the political outlook of the business community?

Brief Elaboration:

Paper will examine the values, beliefs, lifestyles and interpersonal relationships of current Philippine field grade officers, with emphasis on those from the Academy classes of the late 1960s and early 1970s. Questions to be addressed include: what ideas and ideals do these officers hold about their/the military's role in Philippine society? What attitudes do they hold concerning the US, the USSR, and the Third World? How does the current leadership perceive this next generation, and what efforts might they make to influence/direct or coopt it?

Although foreign investment plays a crucial role in Indonesia's economic development and the government actively seeks new investment, the ambivalence of influential Indonesians compounds the difficulties caused by corruption and inefficiency. The Indonesian Military: A Profile of Its Interests in the Economy

Brief Elaboration: The Indonesian military is extensively involved in economic activity. The military runs a substantial number of business operations in direct support of its own activities--such as uniform manufacture--as well as income producing operations--such as timber--to subsidize operating budgets. The extent of the military's involvement in the economy is unknown. Observers can only say that it is very extensive and accounts for a substantial portion of the military's operational funds. Some of the published academic literature on the subject gives a good background on the extent of the military's economic activities. Discussion with academics and US military and other personnel who have served in Indonesia would provide substantial additional information on the subject.

Topic: Japan's military/industrial complex

Brief Elaboration: The research should be designed to determine if Japan in fact has or is building what could be described as a military-industrial complex. The Japan Defense Agency is placing greater emphasis on domestic production of weapons systems. How will this affect Japanese defense industries? What direction and future do we see for Japan's defense industries?

Topic: China's Interest in Dual Use Technologies

Brief Elaboration:

China's priorities for S&T development over the next several years include integrated circuits; computers, software, and peripheral equipment; composite materials; fiber optics; and lasers. While development of these technologies is designed to help meet domestic industrial requirements and to enable China to enter new export markets, these technologies also have military applications. We require a study that examines the military applications for these technologies and how their development fits into China's priorities for military modernization.

Topic: Western Europe and Japan: Security Cooperation

Brief Elaboration: Talks underway or scheduled between Japan, France, and West Germany on arms control and defense issues underscore the growing appreciation in both Europe and Japan of common security interests. The Europeans regard Japan as a leader in technology and will seek to improve relations with the Japanese. They also view Japan as a competitor in strategic technologies and are concerned that the gap between Europe and Japan will widen. This paper would look at the cooperative aspects of this budding relationship as well as its competitive nature and would assess long term trends and their implications for US policy.

Topic: NATO: Declining Out-of-Area Combat Capabilities

Brief Elaboration: This study focus on those NATO Allies in Europe that maintain capability for out-of-area combat operations, particularly France, the United Kingdom, and to a lesser extent Italy. Despite the creation of the French Rapid Action Force, British lessons-learned from the Falklands campaign, and growing Italian interest in the protection of its interests in the Mediterranean, fiscal constraints are having a negative impact on their force structure and capabilities. The paper would assess these trends and the implications for the US in terms of potential Allied support for US out-of-area contingencies.

Topic: Allied Views of the Chemical Weapons Issue

Brief Elaboration: One or two papers could explore various aspects of the chemical weapons issue in Western Europe. One paper could focus on offensive chemical weapons issues, particularly European views on US stockpile modernization and weapons storage in Europe as well as European doctrinal approaches to the use of chemical weapons in wartime and NATO's approach to deterrence of Soviet CW use. Allied CW defensive capabilities and improvement planning also could be addresses. A second paper could focus on the arms control aspects, particularly Allied policies, approaches to, and expectations of the chemical negotiations taking place under the UN Conference on Disarmament.

REPLY TO ATTENTION OF:

7 May 1985

Institute for National Strategic Studies

Honorable William J. Casey
 Director
 Central Intelligence Agency
 Washington, DC 20505

Dear Mr. Casey:

One of the primary goals of Lieutenant General Richard D. Lawrence, the President of the National Defense University, has been the redirection of the research efforts of the University's faculty, staff, and students toward addressing the needs of the policy-making community. He has created the Institute for National Strategic Studies to foster such policy-oriented work at NDU. Each of our students at the Industrial College of the Armed Forces and the National War College, many of whom are nationally recognized authorities in their areas of expertise, must fulfill a research requirement during their year here. While the selection of topics is a matter of personal choice, we have tried to persuade as many students as possible to examine currently important national security issues and directly assist officials who formulate and execute foreign and defense policies. During the course of the next several months you will be receiving copies of those acceptable student products concerning topics which you suggested to us last year.

As we did a year ago, we are writing to a number of officials in the policy community to learn what longer term research topics most interest you and your staff. We will provide your suggestions to our students as they make their selections in the fall, and we will forward their research to you upon completion. Any topics you provided to us last year which have not already been researched could be made available to our students again, but interests and points of contact change each year. You may wish to update the entire list. We will encourage interaction between your organization and our students during the course of their research as well as send you at least one progress report.

General Lawrence has given the Institute for National Strategic Studies the responsibility for collecting and coordinating the research topics. Please have your staff use the format enclosed, and we would appreciate receiving responses by 20 June. For each topic, please provide a point of contact in your agency and an indication of the time frame during which research on this topic would be of use to you. If you have any questions, please contact me at (202) 475-1190 or AUTOVON 335-1190.

This University is committed to producing studies illuminating important national security issues for senior policy-makers. We look forward to your cooperation and involvement in this process, and we welcome the possibility of face-to-face exchanges concerning topics of mutual interest.

Respectfully,
